When I think about what makes Cummins a great place to work, our Code of Conduct is one of the first things that comes to mind.

The Code demands that we treat all of our stakeholders with dignity and respect – employees, customers, suppliers, shareholders and others. It says Cummins must act with integrity, as honestly and transparently as possible.

A truly ethical company can’t be that way part of the time. Cummins must always do the right thing whether that means keeping our word to a customer or complying with all laws in a market where others may not.

As our Company prepares to go from a multi-national to a truly global company, our success may depend to a large extent on how well we adhere to our Code.

We’ve been fortunate to enjoy a period of unprecedented growth recently, but growth often comes with some challenges. As we add many new employees over the next few years, we must ensure the principles that have made Cummins a great place to work are not lost or forgotten.

Adhering to our Code can be a challenge. It may mean surrendering a competitive advantage and telling potential customers that we can’t do business with them. It will undoubtedly mean working in teams of people who have different backgrounds and viewpoints and resolving disagreements with openness and honesty to arrive at innovative solutions for our customers.

The good news is we can draw on more than 90 years of ethical behavior at Cummins to guide us, starting with W.G. Irwin and Clessie Cummins, who launched the Company. That same approach continued with J. Irwin Miller, who positioned Cummins for international success, and with my predecessor, Tim Solso, who made leadership synonymous with ethics and values at our Company.

Each leader faced moments when he could have ignored principle to pursue an easier, more profitable path. Each realized the easy answer isn’t always the right answer – for the sustainability of our Company or for the communities where our employees live and where we do business.
Part of adopting a growth mindset is honoring not only the Code but what it takes to keep the Code effective as Cummins grows. I know there are times when it’s not easy to report a problem, but taking action can be critical to our Company’s future. That’s why our Code states clearly that employees who report problems can do so without risk to their careers.

Violations of the Code at any level of the Company will be acted upon swiftly and appropriately. Anyone who violates the Code will be held accountable.

As you look through the Code, I trust you’ll see why I think it is so important. I hope you will think about how the Code supports our Vision, Mission and Values and why the Code is vital to making Cummins a great place to work.

Then, I hope you’ll join me as we work together to uphold a more than 90-year tradition of ethical behavior at Cummins.

Tom Linebarger

We will protect our technology, our information and our intellectual property.

We will follow the law everywhere.

Cummins Inc. is headquartered in the United States, but we are truly a global citizen. Sometimes the U.S. laws follow the Company and its people around the world. For example, U.S. laws about how we sell our products, how we compete and how we interact with government officials often apply around the world. We also must follow the applicable laws in the other countries where we do business.

This may get complicated at times, but we must always make sure that our actions and our words follow the letter and spirit of all applicable laws. If you have any questions, please contact the Cummins Law Department for assistance.
Some of the laws in my country make it difficult for us to get all the business that is out there and I don’t believe all of our competitors are playing by the rules. If our competitors are not following the law, why should we?

Our Code and our values are not affected by the actions of others. We must always follow the law and our Code, even if it means that business will be lost.

I work outside the United States and my country’s laws regarding exporting products to certain countries are not the same as the laws in the United States. How do I know which laws I should follow?

Sometimes one set of laws takes precedence over another depending on the situation. Other times, both laws may apply. Therefore, you should always contact the Cummins Law Department when you have a question about which laws may apply to a certain situation.

Significant Underlying Policies:

- Export Control Policy
- Prohibited Payments to Government Officials Policy
- Antitrust Compliance Policy

We will follow the law everywhere.

We will embrace diverse perspectives and backgrounds, and treat all people with dignity and respect.

At Cummins we must be inclusive and ensure that employees and other stakeholders are always treated with dignity and respect. We are stronger because of the diversity of our employees. To remain a global leader and to continue to grow, our people must have a work environment that is welcoming and takes advantage of their unique talents and perspectives.

We strictly forbid discrimination, harassment and retaliation, and strive to provide equal opportunity and fair treatment for all. Cummins prohibits discrimination or harassment based on an individual’s race, color, religion, gender, national origin, age, disability, union affiliation, sexual orientation, gender identity and/or expression, or other status protected by applicable law. We encourage employees who see mistreatment to speak out and we protect them from retaliation if they do.

We support human rights around the world, and we ensure that our employees and other stakeholders are treated with dignity. We comply with all applicable laws, and we will treat employees and their representatives fairly and honestly. We will not tolerate child or forced labor anywhere in the world and we will not do business with any company that does. We respect employees’ freedom of association, right to bargain collectively and all other workplace rights.

Our commitment to fair treatment also extends to our joint ventures, suppliers and other partners. Through our Supplier Code of Conduct, we will make sure our suppliers and partners understand our values and treat their stakeholders in a way that is consistent with those values.

“In the search for character and commitment, we must rid ourselves of our inherited even cherished biases and prejudices. Character, ability and intelligence are not concentrated in one sex over the other, nor in persons with certain accents or in certain races or in persons holding degrees from universities over the others. When we indulge ourselves in such irrational prejudices we damage ourselves most of all, and ultimately assure ourselves of failure in competition with those more open and less biased.”

J. Irwin Miller, Former CEO, Cummins Inc.
I feel that my supervisor is discriminating against certain members of our organization but I’m afraid to say anything for fear of losing my job. What should I do?

Cummins does not tolerate discrimination and encourages employees to speak out with their concerns. You have multiple avenues to raise your concerns. You may contact your supervisor, Human Resources or you may call the Ethics helpline or report through the EthicsPoint webpage by typing “ethics.cummins.com” on your internet browser. Cummins does not tolerate retaliation and no action will be taken against you because you reported a concern.

I heard an allegation that one of our major suppliers is in violation of the labor laws in its country. Is this something Cummins should look into?

Yes. Cummins has a Supplier Code of Conduct that sets forth our expectations for suppliers. You should report the information to your business leader, the Purchasing Department or the Law Department so that Cummins can investigate the matter and take appropriate action.
Our goals in the global marketplace are to win business and provide value to our stakeholders. We compete aggressively but always play within the rules. Whether dealing with competitors, governments or business partners, the mandate is the same: We compete fairly and honestly.

Our employees should not take any action in the pursuit of business that they would not be comfortable reading about on the front page of the local newspaper or explaining to our senior management. Likewise, we are responsible for the actions of third parties operating on our behalf and will hold them to the same standards as our employees.

For example:

- We do not bribe private individuals or government officials for any reason – we get business because our products, services and people are the best.

- We do not use the confidential information of others to gain an improper advantage.

- We do not mislead others or compromise our integrity to gain an advantage.

- We do not disparage our competitors or their products – we truthfully talk about the advantages of Cummins.

Although we operate in many different places with different cultures and legal systems, there are no exceptions to our commitment to compete fairly and honestly at all times.
Someone sent me a copy of our largest competitor’s confidential internal pricing sheet for its products. This will be very helpful to us as we determine our pricing for next year. Can I use this information?

No. If the information is confidential, it cannot be used. Doing so is unethical and also could expose you and the Company to risk under antitrust or anti-competition laws. You should immediately contact the Cummins Law Department so that the information can be destroyed or returned to its owner.

In my region it is customary to provide our customers, including government officials, with expensive gifts to help maintain a good relationship. If it is necessary to do business, we have to do it, right?

No, we do not make improper payments of any kind to influence our customers, suppliers or partners. Making such payments—which include gifts—may subject you and Cummins to large penalties, criminal prosecution and the loss of business. Before making or authorizing any gift or gratuity, please make sure you have consulted the appropriate Cummins policy or contacted the Cummins Law Department.

We are not supposed to disparage our competitor’s products. Can we point out the differences between our products and why our products are better?

Yes. It is OK to point out to customers or others why we believe the features and performance of Cummins products are better than our competitors. That is what we should be doing. It is not acceptable under our Code to make unsubstantiated claims about our competitors’ products or to call them “junk” or “unsafe.” Instead we should focus on the data and the reasons why Cummins is the best.
There are times when an employee may have a personal interest that could conflict with the interests of the Company. As employees, we must focus on what is best for our stakeholders and manage potential conflicts so that our personal interests do not interfere with our business dealings.

Employees cannot have improper relationships with suppliers or other third parties and must be vigilant in ensuring that personal or family relationships do not pose even an appearance of a potential conflict of interest. Employees also cannot accept cash incentives or other gratuities from suppliers or customers in exchange for securing business or other favorable treatment.

Also, Cummins employees cannot take any action that would allow them or others to personally benefit from inside information regarding the Company. You cannot trade in Cummins stock when you know about a material event that has not yet been made public. You should always contact the Cummins Law Department if you have questions about a stock transaction.
My spouse is the co-owner of a business that is bidding to be a Cummins supplier. What should I do?

You should immediately disclose the relationship to your supervisor and whoever is in charge of the bidding process. If your spouse’s company is bidding for business it is critical that you not play any role in the selection of the supplier. If your spouse’s company is chosen to be the supplier, the Company will take steps to ensure that you are not involved.

I know through my job that Cummins is going to have a strong quarter and that sales are going to exceed our expectations. Can I tell my brother to buy Cummins stock now before we release our earnings to the public next week?

No. Using inside information to benefit yourself or others is never the right thing to do. Moreover, most countries have laws making such conduct illegal. You could be placing the Company and yourself at risk of liability or criminal prosecution.

A company we are considering for a supply contract has offered to fly me to a sporting event and entertain me for the weekend. Is that a problem?

Yes, it is a problem. We select our business partners and suppliers solely on legitimate business reasons. We do not want to take any action that would appear to be a conflict of interest. Regardless of whether you are directly involved in selecting this supplier, this would create the wrong impression. Please consult the Company policy on meals, gifts and discounts for guidance and always speak to your supervisor before accepting any gift or gratuity from a third party.
This principle is central to our mission as a company, and as our global reach grows so does our responsibility to ensure that our actions around the world reflect a commitment to the environment.

That commitment takes on several forms, including:

- Using our technological capabilities to produce the safest and cleanest-running products on the market.
- Minimizing the environmental impact of our manufacturing and service facilities through comprehensive conservation and waste reduction efforts.
- Ensuring that Cummins employees everywhere have clean and safe facilities in which to work.
- Demonstrating a commitment to sustainable growth by providing leadership on important environmental issues such as climate change.
- Demonstrating a dedication to transparency in sharing our environmental and safety-related activities with key stakeholder groups.

We will demand that everything we do leads to a cleaner, healthier and safer environment.
I work in a Cummins manufacturing facility. What can I do to contribute to the Company’s environmental and safety goals?

When it comes to workplace safety, our goal is simple: We do not want injuries or accidents at any time. Safety begins with each individual employee. We all have a responsibility to contribute to a safe work place by following established safety procedures and by reporting any issues promptly so they do not become problems. Please make sure you are familiar with your site’s safety procedures.

We all can help reduce Cummins’ environmental impact by conserving resources such as water and electricity whenever possible. Our employees also often are our best source of improvement ideas and each of us should feel empowered to offer suggestions that could eliminate waste or make our facilities safer.

How is Cummins working to be a leader on an issue such as climate change?

The Company is actively involved in reducing greenhouse gas emissions in a number of ways. For starters, we recently committed to lowering the greenhouse gas emissions from our facilities by 25 percent as a percentage of our net sales by 2010. Cummins also is a leader in the clean diesel movement to increase the use of fuel efficient and clean-burning diesel engine technology, which would reduce the demand for fossil fuels.

- Alcohol and Illegal Drugs in the Workplace Policy

We will demand that everything we do leads to a cleaner, healthier and safer environment.
We will protect our technology, our information and our intellectual property.

Our technology and our knowledge give us a competitive edge. It is critical that we maintain our advantage by making sure that we protect proprietary information and maximize its value to our shareholders. All Cummins employees must protect the Company’s confidential information and intellectual assets.

Also, it is critical that we use our information, innovations and resources wisely and in the best interests of all of our stakeholders. Our computers and our other resources are to be used for Company business and we must follow all rules regarding their proper usage. We should not use these resources for our personal benefit or for any purpose that conflicts with Cummins’ interests or needs. Confidential or otherwise sensitive Company information should not be filed or stored in a non-Cummins location, such as at an employee’s home or on his or her private computer, without proper approval.

We also must make sure that all important Company documents and information are properly maintained or disposed of under the Company’s document management policy. Employees should take precautions to ensure that laptop computers, mobile phones, PDAs and other devices that contain or store Company information are not lost or stolen, and should report the disappearance of any such equipment immediately.
I was surfing the internet at home and learned about some software that I can download for free that will help me with my Cummins work. Since the software is free and it is business related may I download it to my Cummins computer?

No. Cummins has specific procedures for when software can be added to Cummins systems and employees cannot download software to Cummins computers. In addition, many of these “free” downloads may contain terms that subject Cummins to financial liability or that conflict with existing Cummins software licensing agreements. If you have any questions about the software that is approved by Cummins, please contact the Information Technology (IT) department.

I’ve been working on an exciting new technology that we are creating for our engines. I have been meeting with a supplier over lunch to discuss the sourcing of this work and exchanging e-mails with the supplier containing information about the technology. Is there anything I need to be doing to safeguard the Company’s interest?

Yes. Before talking to suppliers or customers about Cummins technology, you should contact the Cummins Law Department to be sure that the appropriate confidentiality and non-disclosure agreements are first put in place. This will ensure that the other party honors the confidentiality of our intellectual property and will help protect the Company’s interests if there is ever a dispute about ownership of the information.

I have some documents containing test results of one of our engines that are the subject of some pending litigation. Can I destroy these documents?

No. You must maintain documents in accordance with the Company’s document management program. Documents that relate to pending litigation or government investigations can never be destroyed. You should contact the Law Department and make sure they are aware of the documents.

We will protect our technology, our information and our intellectual property.

We will demand that our financial records are accurate and that our reporting processes are clear and understandable.

The accuracy of our financial reports is of the utmost importance to our credibility. We will not tolerate fraud or otherwise make false or misleading financial entries or statements, and all our employees must strive for complete accuracy in our financial reporting.

Additionally, Cummins is committed to total transparency in its financial reports. We cooperate fully with our auditors and under no circumstances withhold information from them. We also will seek to build and maintain a robust system of financial controls and processes to ensure the accuracy and timeliness of our financial reporting.
I have received several large invoices for payments due to our suppliers. However, if I record these as an expense now, it will hurt our numbers this quarter. Is it OK to just put these in a drawer for now and record them accurately after the end of the quarter?

No. Failing to record these expenses would reduce current period expenses and result in overstated earnings. This could have a material and fraudulent effect upon the current period financial reports. This is against Company policy and the law.

I hear a lot of discussion these days in the media about corporate fraud. What is fraud and what should I do if I suspect fraud in the workplace?

Fraud is any dishonest act engaged in by an employee to gain an improper benefit. Fraud can take many forms such as theft of property, false financial entries, incorrect expense reports, personal use of the Company credit card or other acts of dishonesty. Cummins will promptly investigate reported incidents of fraud and, where appropriate, will prosecute instances of fraud. Employees who commit fraud will be subject to the highest possible level of discipline.

Various Company policies prohibit fraud in its different forms. If you become aware of any act that might constitute fraud, you should report your concerns immediately to one of the following:

- Your supervisor
- Your business leader
- Human Resources
- Internal Audit
- A member of the Cummins Law Department

If for any reason you are not comfortable taking your concerns to any of the above departments or individuals, contact the Ethics Helpline. Instructions for contacting the Ethics Helpline are contained at the end of this document.

Significant Underlying Policies:

- Financial Representations Policy
- Fraud Reporting Policy
- Document Management Policy
- Delegation of Authority Policy

We will demand that our financial records are accurate and that our reporting processes are clear and understandable.
Cummins is only as strong as the communities in which we operate and in which our employees live, so it is imperative that the Company play a role in serving the needs of the community wherever possible.

Cummins supports its communities in a number of ways. The Cummins Foundation provides funding to organizations that address key community needs and, in some cases, matches employees’ contributions to local charities. The Company also directly contributes to charitable causes when appropriate.

Perhaps most importantly, however, is that Cummins works to create an environment that encourages employees to become active in their communities and supports those efforts whenever possible. Cummins strongly believes that supporting volunteer involvement by its employees not only benefits our communities but strengthens the Company by providing valuable leadership experience and increasing employee satisfaction.

At the same time, however, employees should refrain from speaking or making commitments on behalf of Cummins for the benefit of the organization or cause in which they participate. Should an official Cummins position be required or desired, it should be made by the appropriate Cummins official.

The Company formally participates in the political process through its Government Affairs Office by engaging elected officials and taking positions on legislative and regulatory issues of importance to the Company. Additionally, Cummins encourages employees to be active in the political process. However, employees should not engage in any political activities at work or use any company resources for political purposes.
I am interested in getting involved in community activities, but I don’t know where to start. Who can I speak to?

Many Cummins locations have Community Involvement Teams, which coordinate volunteer and community efforts on behalf of Cummins and its employees. Please contact the Company’s Corporate Social Responsibility office for contact information for the Community Involvement Team that serves your area. If you already support a local community organization and want to inquire about support from Cummins, you also can check with your Community Involvement Team coordinator or the Corporate Social Responsibility office.

We will strive to improve our communities.

Significant Underlying Policies:

- Employee Participation in Community Activities Policy
- Employee Participation in Political Campaigns Policy
- Cummins Political Contributions Policy and Political Action Committee Guideline
We will communicate honestly and with integrity.

We have a responsibility to be honest and accurate in our communications to employees and the public. No employee will knowingly make a false or misleading statement to the media, financial community, government official, public agency or in a public forum.

We will work to establish and follow communications processes that ensure a timely flow of information throughout the organization, and that create consistent messages that are delivered by the appropriate individuals in the organization.

Only authorized individuals should speak to the media or financial community. Media and sensitive customer inquiries should be directed to the Director - Public Relations, and employees should not speak to the media on Company-related issues without prior approval of the Director – Public Relations.

Cummins has a legal obligation to disclose material financial information as broadly and equitably as possible. Inquiries from stock market analysts, investors or other members of the financial community should be forwarded to the Director – Investor Relations.
I received a call from my local newspaper. The reporter would like to come to the office to interview me for a story on a community organization in which I am involved. Is this OK?

Yes. Our employees are not prohibited from talking to the media on non-Cummins issues. Just make it clear to the reporter that you are speaking as a private individual, and not on behalf of Cummins. If a reporter wants to come to a Cummins facility to conduct the interview, you should clear the visit with your supervisor and take any necessary steps to avoid undue distraction to co-workers. If you are uncertain about whether it is appropriate to participate in a media interview, please contact the Director-Public Relations.

I have been asked to speak to a reporter for a story on one of our businesses, and during the course of the interview, the reporter asks my opinion on speculation that a competitor is having quality issues with a key product. I have heard the same rumors. How do I respond?

We should not engage in circulating rumors – either about Cummins or our competitors. You should only share facts about Cummins and let our competitors speak for themselves. Competing with integrity demands that we take the high road in such cases.

A reporter asks a question about sales volumes in a particular market. I have the information, but am not sure that I can share it publicly. What should I do?

Cummins has clear rules about what financial information we make public and how it should be discussed. We also have a responsibility to share material financial information broadly with investors and the financial community.

If you are uncertain whether the information requested should be shared publicly or how it should be disclosed, contact the Director- Investor Relations for assistance.
We will create a culture where all employees take responsibility for ethical behavior.

Our culture is one that encourages employees to take ownership for ethical behavior and to speak up if they have concerns. All employees are required to follow the Code of Business Conduct and to set an example of ethical behavior.

Cummins will provide support to employees through a Compliance and Ethics Program that provides training to employees on the Code of Business Conduct and other important areas of compliance.

Remember, Cummins has a non-retaliation policy that protects employees who raise concerns in good faith. If you are aware of any conduct that you believe is unethical or inappropriate, you have an obligation to speak up. Concerns can be raised in a number of ways:

- Employees can bring issues to the attention of a supervisor.
- Employees can speak to human resources.
- Employees can raise issues with a third-party via on-line and telephone reporting systems. Please type “ethics.cummins.com” on your web browser for information about how to report your concerns.

If you have a question about whether conduct is appropriate or lawful, you also may contact the Cummins Law Department for assistance. If you do not know who to contact in the Law Department, simply send a Lotus Note to “Law Department” and you will be contacted by the appropriate attorney from your region of the world.
The Role of Leaders

If you are an officer, a director or a manager who supervises others, you have a special responsibility to model the behavior of the Code and make sure it is enforced. If you see actions that might violate the Code – even if they do not affect you in any way – you are required to bring them to the Company’s attention and make sure they are addressed.

An employee who reports to me has come to me with information about a co-worker’s conduct that would clearly violate the Code and Company policy if true. However, she has asked me to keep it to myself for now. What should I do?

You must take action to make sure the issue is investigated and addressed. The Company, through you, is now aware of the conduct and is responsible for addressing it. If you need assistance on the proper way to address, contact your supervisor, Human Resources or the Law Department.

I have some concerns about my department and whether the employees truly understand the Cummins Code of Business Conduct. What should I do?

Seek assistance. Contact your supervisor or business or Human Resources leader and ask for more information. The Company will be glad to provide additional training or support to make sure that all employees understand the Code and their responsibilities to comply.

I want to raise a complaint about my supervisor, who is mistreating me, but he is a higher ranking employee than me and I am afraid of the consequences if he finds out that I have complained about him. Will Cummins protect me?

Yes. Cummins protects all employees who raise concerns in good faith. We prohibit all retaliation and will not allow any employee to be punished for reporting concerns. Cummins will investigate your concerns as confidentially as possible and will take appropriate action.

We will create a culture where all employees take responsibility for ethical behavior.

 Significant Underlying Policies:

- Employee Non-retaliation Policy
- Treatment of Each Other at Work Policy
Living the Code

The Cummins Code of Business Conduct has been approved by our senior leadership and the Company’s Board of Directors. The principles embodied in the Code are intended to guide our employees’ treatment of one another, as well as their interaction with customers, suppliers, partners, public officials and other stakeholders.

Each of us has a stake in living the Code and in enforcing its rules and principles. In order for the Code to be effective, employees must understand that violations come with consequences – up to and including termination of employment. At the same time, employees must be confident that they can report violations of the Code to the proper individuals within the company without fear of retaliation and that their concerns will be fully investigated in a timely manner.

This point cannot be stressed too often: Cummins has a specific policy safeguarding employees against retaliation for reporting suspected violations of the Cummins Code of Business Conduct. Employees also have a variety of vehicles for reporting their concerns, including – where allowed by law – anonymous reporting. (See Resources and Contact Information for details on ethics violations reporting options.)

The principles established in the Cummins Code of Business Conduct are meant to stand the test of time, but their application should reflect the current business climate. Toward that end, the Company will seek feedback from employees as part of an annual review, which will be used to update the Code as necessary. Additionally, most salaried employees are required to complete an annual ethics certification to confirm that they are familiar with the Code and have followed it completely.

The Cummins Code of Business Conduct applies to all Cummins Inc. employees, officers and directors. The Cummins Code of Business Conduct also applies to all entities wholly owned by Cummins and all entities that Cummins directly manages. However, Cummins also is a partial owner of certain joint ventures and distributors. For these entities not directly controlled by Cummins, this Code may not apply. However, those entities are responsible for creating a set of policies and procedures that ensure that the entity follows the law and the same values as Cummins Inc. Cummins also makes sure that it chooses joint venture partners that share the values embodied in the Cummins Code of Business Conduct.
